About the Job

This role will be based in Mparntwe working alongside children, young people, elders, and families, specifically those that are connected to Yarrenty Arltere, to promote family health and wellbeing and to address key health concerns identified in the community.

Health in the Hands of the People

The Health Team is committed to creating and delivering responses to population health needs with the local community.

The position will be working within the Health Team, in a multi-disciplinary team, to deliver the Children's Ground Family Health and Wellbeing Framework within Yarrenty Arltere and other communities to improve the health and wellbeing outcomes for the community.

The Health Team will work in an integrated way with the Education and Wellbeing Team to develop and implement family health plans with individuals and families and create and deliver responses to population health needs with the local community. The team will work collaboratively with internal and with external partners.

About You

This position is for a First Nations person with language skills, preferably in Arrernte (western, central and/or eastern) or any other central desert language, with a strong understanding of traditional and western health. This will include the recognition and support of local cultural knowledge systems and practices and the agency of consumers.
